If the crowd in the grandstand was great, that in the betting ring was simply a mass of struggling men. It was hard players as a rule do not take kindly to favorites, preferring long shots where they can get large returns for small investments, and as luck often favors the one who knows least about what he is speculating on, some long shots won. A Day for the Pencilers.

The talent fared badly on the day, six straight favorites going down to defeat. By the time they got to the seventh race, where tomasked won, it is doubtful if they had enough left to recoup their

The programme opened with a hurdle race at a mile and three-quarters, for which there were eight starters. It was won by McFonso, owned by F. R. Keyes, a practicing altorney in the District of Columbia. The last time McFenzo started be was ridden by a colored jockey named Grimes. Yesterday he was ridden by a white boy named Houlahan. McFonso's Improvement Suspicious.

The horse showed startling improvement over his last performance, and woh in easy fashlon by three lengths. The stewards were not at all satisfied with McFonso's in and out running. Keyes was called into the stand and told that his entries would be refused during the balance of the meeting, and his case re-ferred to the National Steeplechase and unit Association.

The feature of the day's racing was the fifth on the card, the Washington Cup, at two and one-quarter miles. It was won by Warranied, with a great pull in the weights. After loafing behind the leaders all the way until the lest turn for home, he came away easily, beating the favorite, Carbuncle, one and one-half lengths. Verify at 20 to 1.

Of the many upsets of the day, the greatest was in the third. Verify, a rank outsider in the betting, won at closing odds against him of 20 to 1, beating the favorite Delmarch a neck. Verify opened in the betting as good in some books as 40 and 56 to 1, entirely out of line, as this horse has been always considered a good selling plater in the West.

The second event also went to an out-rider in the betting at 12 to 1. Melater-singer, ridden by J. Shek, turning the trick, A supposed good thing in this race was Adelaide Frince, opening at 10 to 1 and closing at 8 to 5. She ran a good race, and was coming very fast at the end, finishing third.

Keyes, the owner of McFonso, called upon The Times man in the press stand, and requested him to state through the col-umns of The Times his version of the suspension of McFonso. Mr. Keves stated that the last time Grimes rode the horse the race was so unsatisfactory that he naked Grimes for an explanation, and that his reply sas that he lost his bead and could not central the horse from running out, and that this lost him the race. "I have had this boy in my employ for ten years," said Mr. Keyes, "and have al-ways found him honest and trustworthy. I had to be satisfied with this explana-tion.
